Eastern Army Antiaircraft Command

THE Eastern Army Antiaircraft Command, organized in September 1950 at Stewart Air Force Base, New York, is the Army member of the joint defense team responsible for the air defense of the eastern United States. With the Eastern Air Defense Force, this command has been assigned the primary mission of protecting strategic and vital areas of the eastern United States against aerial attack.

Brig. Gen. Hayden

The command consists of several antiaircraft artillery brigades with a zone of responsibility overlapping three Continental Army areas. The command structure of the Eastern Army Antiaircraft Command closely parallels that of the Eastern Air Defense Force commanded by Major General Morris L. Nelson, USAF. Together they form the Air Defense Command—Army Antiaircraft Command team with respective national headquarters at Ent Air Force Base in Colorado Springs, Colorado. General Benjamin W. Chidlaw, USAF, is commander of the Air Defense Command and Lieutenant General John T. Lewis, USA, commands the Army Antiaircraft Command. With our mutual efforts directed toward a common goal, we have effected and maintained close coordination of operational matters at all levels of command. Headquarters, Eastern Army Antiaircraft Command, located at Middletown, New York, since March 1951, moved to nearby Stewart Air Force Base in September of this year upon the construction of adequate facilities for the Eastern Air Defense Force.

The responsibility for the logistical support of units attached or assigned to the Eastern Army Antiaircraft Command has been delegated by the Department of the Army to the Continental Army commander within whose area the AA units are located. These responsibilities have been further delegated to the various posts, camps, and stations within each Army area. Through coordination and close cooperation with the Continental Armies, senior brigade commanders (one in each of the Army areas) have resolved virtually all of the problems which have arisen in this field.

In order to accomplish the assigned mission, it is the aim of all units within the Eastern Army Antiaircraft Command to achieve and maintain the highest pos-

The Defense Department has drafted tentative legislation to implement recommendations of the Moulton Commission on family medical care at an estimated cost of $30 to $40 million a year. The bill has not yet been sent to the Budget Bureau, according to information available at the Pentagon.

The Moulton Commission, in a report to Defense Secretary Charles E. Wilson, said that an adequate dependent medical care program was deemed essential to morale.

The Commission said that at the present time scores of thousands of Service families are not able to receive such care, either because they live too far from available military medical facilities or because these are overcrowded.

The Commission urged a program which would provide for the use of civilian hospital facilities and civilian doctors to augment family medical care which the Services are able to render.

Dr. Moulton, president emeritus of Brookings Institute, and his associates acknowledged that legislation was necessary.

Secretary Wilson then named a committee to draft legislation to implement the Moulton Commission report.

The Uniformed Services are rushing ahead with initial implementation of the new Survivor Benefits Law for more than 200,000 on the retired lists.

This is being done notwithstanding the fact that a pertinent Executive Order had yet to be issued as THE JOURNAL went to press.

At the outset, the legislation, which goes into effect on 1 Nov., will affect at least a half million persons and many millions more subsequently.

The law is designed to provide benefits for families of retired Service personnel who die while in retired status. It provides no new benefits for survivors of those who die while in active status.

Provisions of the legislation—officially the Uniformed Services Contingency Act of 1953—were reported in detail in the 8 August issue of THE JOURNAL.

The measure provides an opportunity for all persons in the Uniformed Services—Regulars and non-Regulars—to take reduced retired pay in order to provide annuities for widows and children. The annuities can be as much as one-half or as little as one-eighth of the person's retired pay.

The critical reason why the Services are speeding action is that those on the retired list must make their choice between 1 Nov. and 30 April 1954. If death occurs before a choice is made, survivors receive no benefits.

The 400-bed Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., will be closed and placed in a standby status before 1 March, 1954.

Closing of the hospital will bring an estimated net savings during fiscal year 1954 of about $970,000 and a saving of approximately $1,500,000 in fiscal year 1955, according to an Army announcement.

Army authorities said late this week that the first officer temporary promotions—first lieutenant to captain—may be announced before 1 Nov.

At the same time, it was reported that the captain to major board met on schedule this week, with the board to name majors for lieutenant colonel due to hold its first session next week.

The Medical Service selection board has been delayed until 2 Nov.

Meantime, THE JOURNAL has learned that tentative plans are being made to convene a selection board to recommend lieutenant colonels for promotion to colonel.

This board probably will meet in late January or February, although a final decision has not yet been made.

Representative W. Sterling Cole (R-NY), a ranking Armed Services Committee member, has "strongly protested" the new Defense Department action permitting sales of liquor by the drink and bottle on Army and Air Force installations. The Navy and Marine Corps have had such authority in the past.

Representative Cole, who is the author of the legislative provision which the Pentagon invoked in setting up the new rules, says he is determined to take the matter to Congress if the Department does not voluntarily modify the regulation.

The issue is destined for heated Capitol Hill debate.

Assistant Defense Secretary John A. Hannah, who is president of Michigan State College and as such a recognized authority on problems of youth welfare, has said it was he who approved the change in policy, that he stands by his decision and is prepared to defend it as being in "the best interests of the Armed Forces."

Congressman Cole takes exception. He says it "is both wrong and unnecessary for the Federal Government to be in the business of trafficking in bottled liquor." He adds that "unless discontinued by order of the Secretary of Defense, I shall urge Congress to legislate against such practice."

THE JOURNAL has been able to obtain and publishes herewith in full the text of a letter addressed by Representative Cole to a constituent who inquired about his position on the admittedly controversial matter.

Representative Cole's attitude is particularly important. He is the author of the amendment to the 1951 UMT legislation which gives the Defense Secretary authority to make uniform regulations regarding alcoholic beverages for the Armed Forces.

The Defense Department has interpreted this provision as granting authority for the repeal of a 1901 legislative ban on the sale of liquor by the bottle and drink at military installations of the Army—and at Air Force bases also.

Representative Cole contends that it

III. SECDEF EXPLAINS PROGRAM

(At his press conference this week, Secretary Charles E. Wilson elaborated on the activities of the Assistant Secretary for Properties and Installations, Mr. Franklin G. Floete. Last week's JOURNAL published a similar statement by Mr. Wilson on Supply and Logistics, and one week before that there was report on Research and Development. Here is the text of Mr. Wilson's statement on Properties and Installations).

THE responsibilities of the Assistant Secretary for Properties and Installations cover three general areas: Real Property Management, Maintenance, and Construction. Each of these divisions will be headed by a director and staffed by a compact and thoroughly competent group of assistants.

Real Property

The magnitude and importance of the real property field is indicated by the fact that in the continental U. S. and its territories and possessions the three military services own 25½ million acres of land and lease another 3 million acres; the cost of the land, buildings and improvements thereon exceeds $15 billion. The replacement cost would be very much more. Approximately $7½ million is expended annually in lease payments. The 49 million acres comprising the Naval Petroleum Reserves are not included in the foregoing figures.

While property management naturally has received close attention within the three military departments in the past, concerted effort directed from within the Secretary of Defense level can be expected to accomplish material improvements and resultant dollar savings of appreciable size.

MORE EFFECTIVE UTILIZATION of the facilities we have in existence not only will generate savings through operating efficiencies but will reduce the requirements for acquisition and construction of additional facilities.

One important objective under this management area is to minimize the utilization of government-owned facilities in production of items and services which are available and can be procured at competitive prices from private enterprise. Toward this end the DOD is engaged in a detailed study and analysis of its so-called commercial and industrial type facilities.

Since there presently exists no complete and uniform inventory of DOD properties, this division has already initiated action to secure one. When completed it will facilitate determinations as to utilization, acquisitions and disposals. It will also assist in reducing to a minimum space now occupied under lease by the Armed Forces by transferring certain activities from leased premises to those which are government-owned and by proper screening of lease requirements. The ultimate result should be a substantial reduction in such rental costs.

This division will review the real property requirements of the military forces and give particular attention to appraisal methods and to the need and cost of acquisitions. It will satisfy itself that no other facilities exist in either of the Armed Services which might fulfill such need.

THE DIVISION MAINTAINS continuous reviews of the family housing requirements of the Armed Services, formulates family housing policies and plans and develops housing programs. These activities were formerly under the supervision of the Armed Forces Housing Agency which has been abolished as a separate agency and its functions absorbed by this office.

Constant surveillance and study of housing conditions is essential to provide living accommodations to meet approved needs, which are subject to frequent change and to assure full utilization of available housing. Consideration is given at all times to the important influence which proper housing has upon the morale of the Armed Forces.

The division also has under its general jurisdiction plants of the Departmental Industrial Reserve and National Industrial Reserve.

Maintenance

The DOD owns several thousand industrial and non-industrial installations, and activities. The annual cost at this time for maintenance and repairs of these installations exceeds $1 billion.

The field of maintenance of our military facilities has not previously received close attention by the DOD. The annual expenditures in this field are so large that even small proportional savings by use of engineering methods, establishment of maintenance standards and proper work planning will save large sums each year. This new division has already begun studies of present methods, accounting procedures and costs. Private industry will be called upon for technical studies and experienced personnel in an endeavor to obtain the best possible results.

Construction

DOD construction programs have attained substantial proportions particularly beginning with FY 1952. Beginning with FY 1948 through FY 1953 total authorizations have exceeded $11½ billion, total appropriations $9 1/3 billion. Of this, $6 billion is presently under contract against which $4½ billion has been expended for work actually in place.

REVIEW AND ANALYSIS of construction projects proposed by the Military Departments is an important responsibility of the Construction Division. Such projects are carefully screened to assure that only essential construction is undertaken. A continuing review and surveillance of the construction activities of the three military departments is also necessary. One long-range program to be undertaken by this division is an examination of the procedures used by each of the three departments in developing a construction project from its original conception as a requirement, to appropriation by Congress, to the actual placing of the work under contract. It is hoped that it will be possible to insure more uniform treatment and eliminate bottlenecks as a result of this important and continuing study. This study will also include the nature and use of existing master plans of the services.

Another study to be undertaken will be of criteria for determination of construction requirements, including a study of design and construction standards which are basic to the formulation of sound and economical programs.

To accomplish these and other objectives, there has been established within the Construction Division a technical, a planning, and an analysis group, each to be staffed by competent engineers.

General Barth To Athens

Maj. Gen. George B. Barth, USA, has been named Chief of the Joint U. S. Military Aid Group (JUSMAG) in Greece. Since 21 Aug. 1953, he has been CG of the CIC Center, Camp Holabird, Md.

General Barth will replace Maj. Gen. Charles E. Hart who has been Chief of JUSMAG since October 1951. General Hart has been assigned to the Artillery Center, Ft. Sill, Okla., as CG of the Artillery Center and Commandant of the Artillery School.

Maj. Gen. Boniface Campbell, formerly Deputy Assistant Chief of Staff, G-1, replaces General Barth as CIC Chief.

TURRET-TYPE GUN MOUNT. Blister-type .50 cal. Machine Gun Mount installed on M-48 Medium Tank. The mount, designed by the Detroit Arsenal and developed by Aircraft Armaments, Inc., has recently been approved by Army Field Forces. It permits operation of the gun without making it necessary for the gunner to expose himself as has been the case in the past.

Blister-Type MG Mount Approved For M-48 Tanks

Col. Benjamin Whitehouse, Commanding Officer, Detroit Arsenal, has announced the development and Army acceptance of a new turret-type machine gun mount specifically designed for use on the M-48 Medium Tank.

The mount was designed by the Detroit Arsenal. Additional development and construction of the prototypes was by Aircraft Armaments, Inc. of Baltimore, Md. It was tested at the Armored Force Center, Ft. Knox, Ky. and accepted by Army Field Forces with a recommendation that it be released for immediate production. It will become a part of the tanks now being manufactured by Fisher Body, Ford Motor Co., and Chrysler Corp.

The development marks the comple-

Defense Secretary's Remarks Place Doubt On Pentagon Public Works Housing Request

Press conference remarks made this week by Defense Secretary Charles E. Wilson suggest possibility the Pentagon will not ask Congress next year for any public works family housing funds.

Heretofore, the Defense Department has taken the position that Government-built housing was essential for the Armed Forces to augment present Wherry Act construction.

Mr. Wilson was asked about the possibility of a public works housing request next year.

He replied that a determination on this matter has not yet been made and added that "a study is being made of other possibilities."

The fact that the Department's legislative program for next year already is well along gives a strong indication the Budget Bureau will not be called upon to approve or reject funds for public works housing.

This would be in line with the strong efforts currently being made to keep Federal expenditures at an absolute minimum, particularly in view of the delicate situation on the debt ceiling limitation.

At the Pentagon press conference this week, Assistant Defense Secretary Franklin G. Floete for Properties and Installations said that consideration is being given to extension of the Wherry Act.

His remarks confirmed a report in last week's issue of THE JOURNAL, which noted that the Armed Forces are now confronted with a shortage of about 470,000 housing units.

The Armed Forces have been enthusiastic about Wherry Act housing, for which the Government guarantees mortgages, but military leaders insist it cannot do the whole job.

They say that in the first place there are some installations where it is difficult or impossible to find private contractors willing to bid, and secondly they point out that rentals frequently are beyond the means of non-commissioned and junior officers.

Furthermore, it is argued that in the long run the Government-built housing saves money, since the forfeiture of rental allowances pays for the construction over a period of time, with the Government retaining ownership.

Some such housing has paid for itself many times over, it is related.

Nonetheless, the indications this week were that the Defense Department will ask little or no funds for public works housing next year, although conceivably the arguments being made by Service leaders such as Air Force Secretary Harold E. Talbott for improvement in military housing may cause a last-minute change of mind.

Right now, the odds seem against a military public works housing request next year.

Navy Designated to Build Air Force Bases in Spain

Decision to give the Navy's Bureau of Yards and Docks responsibility for building the bases in Spain resulted initially from a request by the Air Force, it came out at Secretary of Defense Wilson's press conference this week.

Assistant Secretary Floete, in charge of Properties and Installations said that the Air Force asked that the work be done by the Navy. Secretary Wilson then pointed out that some of the work in Spain will be on Navy bases as well as Air Force bases and that the Secretaries talked it over and decided to have the Navy handle the work.

A reporter asked if the complaints about the Army Corps of Engineers' work on the North African bases influenced the decision. Mr. Wilson replied that the action is no criticism of the Army Engineers, and added, "Of course, I believe in competition."

Rear Adm. Joseph F. Jelley, Department of Defense Director of Construction, pointed out that the Navy already has built bases for the Air Force on Guam, in the Aleutians, in the Bahamas and are doing some work on the continent.

Navy Mutual Aid Assoc. Drops 7-Yr. Restriction

At the meeting of the Board of Directors on 16 Oct., the Navy Mutual Aid Association decided to remove the seven-year service restriction on membership.

All commissioned and warrant officers on the active list of the Regular Navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard, not over 45½ years of age, are now eligible for full membership without regard to length of service.

Navy Mutual Aid is a non-profit, officer-controlled Association organized in 1879 under the auspices of the Secretary of the Navy for the purpose of providing immediate aid to the dependents of deceased officer personnel in the form of a substantial cash payment wired or cabled anywhere in the world, and in the prompt preparation and submission of all government claims.

Now in its 75th year of successful operation and with assets of 25½ million dollars, the Association is in a stronger position than ever in the past to accomplish the mission for which it was organized. Interested officers may contact their local Non-resident Director or address inquiries to the Navy Mutual Aid Association, Navy Department, Washington 25, D. C.

Col. Kershaw 18th AF I.G.

Appointment of Col. Theodore G. Kershaw as Inspector General for the Eighteenth Air Force is announced by Maj. Gen. Robert W. Douglass, Jr., Eighteenth Air Force Commander, with headquarters at Donaldson AFB, S. C. Colonel Kershaw replaces Col. David E. Kunkel, who has been assigned to the 64th Troop Carrier Wing at Donaldson AFB.

Before receiving his new assignment, Colonel Kershaw was executive officer for the 64th Troop Carrier Wing and Donaldson AFB.

Col. Walker, DC, Retires

Col. Tyler J. Walker, DC, recently commanding officer of the Sixth Army Area Central Dental Laboratory at San Francisco, Calif., will retire 31 Oct. because of physical disability.

Medic Training To Stress "Doctor-Patient" Accord

All future Army Medical Service training programs will include instructions in "interpersonal relationships" in the care and management of patients.

That is to say that the "doctor-patient" relationship which has been stressed in the past has now been broadened to include all members of the medical team who have direct relations with the patient.

An attempt will be made to cultivate a courteous, sympathetic and considerate relationship between the medical team and patients on all levels.

So important does the Army Medical Service consider this new approach that Maj. Gen. George E. Armstrong, Army Surgeon General, recently convened a panel to discuss means of overcoming problems "incident to interpersonal relationships."

The panel recommended specifically that "in all courses taught in our hospitals, the Army Medical Service Graduate School, the Medical Field Service School and the Medical Replacement Training Center, there should be included additional instructional hours on the principles and practices of interpersonal relationships. Constant emphasis should be placed on the subject. Thus, the idea should be stressed at all levels of training."

The panel appointed by General Armstrong was composed of Col. Clifford V. Morgan, Inspector General, Office of the SG; Brig. Gen. Rawley E. Chambers, Chief of the Professional Division, Office of the SG; Col. Paul Hayes, Chief Medical Consultant, Office of the SG; Col. Ruby F. Bryant, Chief of the Army Nurse Corps; Col. Clement F. St. John, Chief of the Medical Plans and Operations Division, Office of the SG; and Col. Robert L. Black, Chief of the Medical Service Corps.

Col. Charles L. Leeham, Chief of the Education and Training Division, Office of the SG, presented the opening remarks to the panel and acted as moderator.

In addition to the actual panel members, the following officers were present during the discussion: Maj. Gen. Silas B. Hays, deputy SG; Brig. Gen. Elbert DeCoursey, director of the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology; Brig. Gen. Stanhope Bayne-Jones, MC (USAR), Technical Director of Research, Medical Research and Development Board; Col. John R. Wood, chairman of the Medical Research and Development Board; Col. Joseph R. Sheaffer, Chief Surgical Consultant, Office of the SG; and Col. C. T. Budge, Chief of the Dental Standards Branch, Dental Division, Office of the SG.

THE AIR FORCE'S NEW North American F-100 "Super Sabre," successor to the famed F-86 "Sabre," races over the Air Force Flight Test Center at Edwards, Calif.

First Production F-100 Super Sabre Accepted by USAF; Faster Than Sound

The first production model of the F-100 Super Sabre rolled off the assembly line at North American Aviation's Los Angeles plant on 20 Oct.

Mr. J. H. Kindelberger, North American's Board Chairman, turned the supersonic fighter over to Lt. Gen. Orval R. Cook, Air Force Deputy Chief of Staff, Materiel, who accepted it on behalf of the Service.

The same afternoon, the party of newsmen and observers who witnessed the ceremonies saw one of the two F-100 prototypes perform over the Palmdale airport in the desert 65 miles from Los Angeles.

Piloted by North American's senior engineering test pilot, George Welch (a former Air Force major), the YF-100, in a 20-degree dive, aimed sonic booms at the airfield. The shock waves shattered windows and sent glass flying through the terminal before the pilot was contacted by radio. No one was hurt, but George A. Rhodes, assistant editor of the San Francisco Call-Bulletin, was blown from his chair while phoning a story to his paper.

The other prototype is at the Salton Sea speed-run course awaiting favorable weather to attempt to better the record now held by the Douglas F4D Skyray.

J. L. Atwood, NAA President, told reporters that the F-100 already has exceeded the speed of sound in level flight at higher altitudes. Mr. Atwood said that the F-100 represents a greater technical step over the Korea-famed F-86 Sabre Jet than the F-86 represented over the F-51 Mustang of World War II.

The F-100 is 45 feet long—seven feet seven inches longer than the F-86E Sabre Jet. Its 36-foot wing span, however, makes its razor-thin wingspread one-foot one-inch narrower than the F-86E, and its 14-foot height is seven inches less than the F-86E.

Nothing was released as to the weight and armament of the F-100. The F-86E has a gross take-off weight of 16,000 pounds and is equipped with six .50 caliber machine guns, with 16 HVAR five-inch rockets under the wings. The F-86E is also capable of carrying two 1,000-lb. bombs.

Heat-resisting titanium is used extensively throughout the F-100. A low-drag, ultra-streamlined fuselage and canopy with but a single air intake duct helps make supersonic speeds attainable. The aircraft has automatic leading edge slats and a low-positioned one-piece horizontal stabilizer. Other equipment includes automatically regulated air conditioning and pressurizing system and automatic fuel system. A redesigned ejection seat simplifies the procedure for pilots quitting the plane in an emergency. A drag chute installation also has been made to shorten ground roll when necessary.

The first Air Force pilot to fly the F-100 was Lt. Col. F. K. (Pete) Everest, Jr., chief of the Flight Test Operations Laboratory at Edwards AFB, Calif.

NAA Test Pilot Welch, first man to fly the F-100, calls the fighter the best he's handled in 13 years of flying.

Welch has been flying North American planes since 1944. Prior to that he was a major in the Air Force. In 33 months of combat service in the Central and Southwest Pacific during World War II, he won the DSC, DFC, Silver Star, Air Medal and Presidential Unit Citation.

He has been credited with shooting down 18 planes, four over Pearl Harbor when he and one other officer were the only pilots from his field to get into the air against the invading Japanese that day.

Col. Tank Replaces B.G.

Col. Charles F. Tank has succeeded Brig. Gen. Richard S. Whitcomb as Commanding Officer of the 373rd Transportation Major Port stationed within the Northeast Air Command with Headquarters at McAndrew AFB, Newfoundland.

Colonel Tank arrived within the command recently to assume the duties as CO of the unit which is on indeterminate TDY in NEAC.

General Whitcomb has been reassigned as CG of the Korean Base Section. He served as CG of the 373rd TMP since 1948.

Third Army Ord. Chief

Col. James L. Massey has been named Third Army Ordnance Officer by Lt. Gen. A. R. Bolling, CG.

Early this year, Colonel Massey completed his second tour of duty in the European Theater, and since returning to the U. S. has been the Ordnance Officer of the Atlanta General Depot.

His wife is the former Anne Williams. They have three children, Samuel C. Massey, a cadet at the U. S. Naval Academy; James Massey, Jr., who is now en route to Japan where he will be employed, and Robert Massey, aged 11.

The Army has authorized release of enlisted men and women up to three months ahead of schedule in order to return to school by a specified deadline or to accept employment of a cyclic nature.

Here is the text of the pertinent sections of Circular 94, which spell out the details:

Army Suspends Training, Except Basic, For Holidays

The Army wants as many of its personnel as possible in the United States to enjoy leave over Christmas or New Year's Day.

To this end, all training, except basic training will be suspended from 8:00 A.M. 21 Dec. to 8:00 A.M. 4 Jan. 1954.

During this holiday period, leave will be granted to the maximum possible number of eligible military personnel. Normally, about half of eligible personnel will be able to take leave over Christmas and the remainder over New Year's Day.

Basic training must be continued to enable the Army to meet its commitments, the Army said.

Because of existing requirement for an uninterrupted flow of trained replacements to overseas commands, any suspension of basic training during this period is not feasible.

However, commanders were authorized to readjust their basic training schedules to permit short leaves for trainees otherwise not eligible, providing such action does not extend the basic training cycle as presently scheduled. In line with this policy, where necessary, leave in advance of accrued leave credits may be granted.

Similarly, commanders may accelerate schedules in those cases where trainee groups are nearing completion of training cycles. This would permit the personnel concerned to commence their two-week mid or post basic training leave before Christmas or New Year's Day, as the case may be.

There will be no scheduled training on Christmas or New Year's Day.

All those granted holiday leave will be briefed on the fact that their leave is subject to emergency rescission.

Army Saves Million Dollars In Allotment Inquiry

Disclosure of fraudulent allotment claims by Army personnel has saved over a million dollars during the past six months, the Defense Department has announced.

Even greater savings are expected to accrue as the 10-month-old investigation continues into dependency allotment claims in this country and Puerto Rico. Cases where fraud has been uncovered have been referred to the Bureau of Internal Revenue for any action which that agency deems advisable.

Since the probe started, a total of 7497 allotment claims involving Puerto Ricans have been filed. Of this number, 3477 have been approved and 2118, or 39 per cent, have been turned down. Some 753 cases have been dropped following the release from service of the enlisted men concerned. Some 73 allotments have been voluntarily cancelled by either the service member or his family.

Three enlisted men charged with attempting to defraud the government by false claims have been convicted and sentenced to six months confinement and given bad conduct discharges.

Action in other fraud cases, as of 24 Sept., follows: under investigation by Army Criminal Investigation Division, 46; referred to Department of Justice for investigation, 25; charges prepared and being held pending return of enlisted men, 31; charges prepared for referral to trial by court martial, 16; cases which have entered pre-trial investigation stage, 9; referred to trial and pending trial, 4; rejected for no further action, 71.

National Guard Association Meets at San Diego 19-22 October

Army Secretary and AF Lt. Gen. Describe Possible Modifications In Guard Role

The conference heard from Army Secretary Robert T. Stevens and Lt. Gen. Orval R. Cook, USAF, possible modifications under consideration by Defense and National Guard leaders.

Mr. Stevens spoke about "minute men" responsibility for antiaircraft defense and General Cook mentioned "defense in depth." Here are the pertinent remarks from their addresses:

SECRETARY STEVENS

Secretary Stevens said a study is being made to determine feasibility of maintaining National Guard antiaircraft units to protect important industrial areas and other vital installations "in much the same way that members of a volunteer fire department are on call to answer fire alarms."

He said that under this plan, National Guard antiaircraft guns would be manned by civilian caretaker personnel on a 24-hour-a-day basis.

Secretary Stevens explained:

"Guard members of these units would be inactive, but would train with the equipment and would be on call in the event of an enemy attack in much the same way that members of a volunteer fire department are on call to answer fire alarms."

"They would be true 'minute men' in every sense of the word."

He stated that details of the plan are not yet firm, "but it appears to be an encouraging approach to the very difficult program of providing sufficient manpower for adequate antiaircraft defenses."

Mr. Stevens did not go into details of the plan—for example, who would call the Guard outfits to their stations, Federal or State authorities.

GENERAL COOK

General Cook said "there has been a great deal of discussion of the proper role of Air National Guard units in the air defense picture now that we must accept the possibility of sudden and unannounced attack."

He gave this picture of how the Air National Guard "can greatly augment" the air defense strength of the U. S. Air Force.

"The Guard can help provide defense in depth, it can help plug gaps in the defense line and it can back up the full-time perimeter force. It will be available to move in and cover areas that might be vacated by U. S. Air Force units ordered elsewhere. Much greater dependence can be placed upon the Air National Guard to provide adequately manned, equipped, and trained units."

General Cook said "the Air Force is depending upon the Air National Guard to furnish major tactical units as well as support units in a state of readiness for immediate commitment."

He emphasized that "plans are revised as often as necessary to keep them coordinated with changes in strategic plans, and to include additional units as they are made ready. The plans cover peacetime training and logistic support as well as mobilization assignments for Air National Guard units."

General Cook noted that the report of the Reserve Program Review Board indicates "the Air National Guard possesses the capability of expanding its tactical unit program within the present 27 wings. This recommendation is under further study in the hope that it may lead to an increase in the number of Air National Guard flying units."

Another glimpse into the future, he said, indicates that the National Guard will receive more and better flying equipment.

"It appears that by June 1955 all units of the Air National Guard will be 100 per cent equipped with first or second line aircraft and about 67 per cent equipped with first line aircraft including F-84's, F-86's and F-94's," General Cook revealed.

The Comptroller General's opinion was rendered in time so that State Comptroller McGovern could take appropriate action before his 1 Oct. 1953 deadline, thus providing Social Security coverage under the State's contract with the Federal Social Security Agency.

Army Vice Chief of Staff Hails Component Attitude

The Army's new Vice Chief of Staff, General Charles L. Bolte, said on 22 Oct. he was greatly encouraged by the increased coordination and cooperation among all components of the Army.

"The National Guard and the Army Reserve and the Regular Army," he said,

"are all close partners, together with the other military services, in a great enterprise—the defense of our Nation."

"That partnership," General Bolte continued, "increases in effectiveness exactly in proportion to the increase in the degree to which all components work and think and plan together."

"They are growing constantly closer."

Gen. Bolte

He warned, however, that "we are in no position to pat ourselves on the back." General Bolte said "I doubt if the time will ever come when we will be justified in sitting back and taking things easy. We still have much to do."

General Bolte said he was encouraged by recent recruiting results in the National Guard and noted that during the past summer the Guard had a net gain of 6,000 men, an increase of almost 50 per cent over the corresponding period last year.

He reported that from a low point of less than 208,000 in February 1952, the Guard has increased by more than 25 per cent.

Top Jewish Chaplain At Ord

Chaplain (Col.) Henry Tavel, 7th Armored Division Chaplain has received orders transferring him to Ft. Ord, Calif. He will leave Camp Roberts, Calif., 24 Oct. 1953 for his new assignment.

The highest ranking rabbi in the Army, Chaplain Tavel was assigned to Camp Roberts in Oct. 1952 as division chaplain after serving for three years in the European Theater.

Army Sec'y Says 280mm Gun "Most Dramatic Advance" In Building Army Unit Firepower

Army Secretary Robert T. Stevens told the National Guard leaders that the goal of the Army's research and development program is "firepower to offset manpower" and he called development of atomic weapons for battlefield employment "the most dramatic advance."

Here is the excerpt from his address at San Diego touching on this progress:

"The Army's research and development program has been the spearhead of our progress and is being carried forward with full vigor in all fields. We want our troops to have in the future, as they do today, the kind of weapons and equipment which, combined with thorough training, excellent leadership, and high morale, can be counted upon to offset any potential enemy's quantitative superiority in manpower. Firepower to offset manpower continues to be our goal."

"The most dramatic advance in our program to build the firepower of our units has been the development of atomic weapons for battlefield employment. Last May I witnessed from a forward trench the firing of the first atomic shell from our new 280-millimeter gun. This gun can hurl either atomic or conventional projectiles further and with greater accuracy than any other artillery piece in our arsenal. It was an awesome sight, signaling an achievement which greatly multiplies the firepower of our forces."

"As I watched that great gun in action,

I was acutely conscious of the vast change that has occurred in artillery in my time. In World War I days, I trained as the lead driver of a field artillery section. Our 75-millimeter field pieces, each drawn by six laboring horses, had only an infinitesimal fraction of the power of the atomic gun. Yet, by comparison, they were cumbersome in operation. They moved slowly under even the best of conditions, sometimes bogging down completely. They had to be manhandled into position, and once emplaced they had a very limited field of fire. The new giant 280 has tremendous mobility. It can move along a highway at 35 miles an hour, and across country with ease. It can be emplaced in a matter of minutes, and fired around the compass. It is so delicately balanced that one man can elevate or depress it by hand if the power mechanism should fail.

"This gun will greatly enhance our defensive capabilities, which is why we have shipped some of them to Europe. Ultimately, as Army guided missiles are perfected, they too will aid in delivering fissionable materials or conventional explosives in close support of Army ground forces. The important thing is that we have the gun now, and can give our field commanders the capability of using atomic explosives safely and accurately in darkness or in any kind of weather, if it should become necessary to do so."

Armory Employees Will Get Social Security Benefits

Two years' effort to gain security benefits for almost 1,500 employees in the New York State Armories was successfully achieved through joint efforts of two State Agencies and by the rendition of an opinion by the U. S. Comptroller General that Federal funds were available to bring these men into the Social Security System.

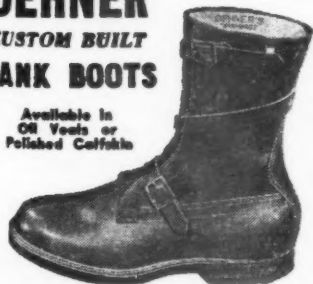

The opinion culminated a joint effort by New York State Comptroller J. Raymond McGovern and Maj. Gen. Karl F. Hausauer, Chief of Staff to the Governor and CG of the New York National Guard, to bring under Social Security certain Federally-paid armory personnel working in State Armories.

At the direction of Comptroller McGovern and General Hausauer, representatives of their offices met with members of the Federal Social Security staff, the National Guard Bureau and the U. S. Comptroller General's office on 14 Sept.

As the result of these discussions, an urgent request for an opinion was submitted to the Comptroller General by the Department of the Army. The Comptroller General's opinion, issued a few days later, was to the effect that the Federal appropriations available to pay the salaries of these employees also could be made available to provide the employer's Social Security contributions for such employees.

Adm. Blandy Will Head Reserve Evaluation Board

Secretary of the Navy Robert B. Anderson has named Admiral William H. P. Blandy, USN-Ret., to head the newly created Naval Reserve Evaluation Board.

In a letter to Admiral Blandy informing him of the choice, Secretary Anderson instructed the board to "critically examine the mission of the Naval Reserve, including Air, as it relates to the needs of the Navy and to the broad aspects of National Defense."

Secretary Anderson's letter emphasized the importance of attaining a maximum return for each dollar employed in fulfilling the mission incumbent upon the Naval Reserve. The letter also points out that although the results of the Naval Reserve program have shown it to be healthy, vigorous and well conceived, continued analysis is deemed essential in order to maintain a sound organization within the structure of the Department of Defense.

"The board will not become involved in the details of administration, such as the forms and system employed for recording drill attendance, or the rules for transferring officers to the inactive status list," Secretary Anderson said in his letter to Admiral Blandy. "Rather, an analysis will be made of such factors as the effectiveness of the inactive and active administration and organizational command lines of the Reserve Program, the organization and scope of the drilling units relative to their achieving the intended purpose and mission, and the training programs as they affect an individual's preparedness for placement and utilization on active duty versus the anticipated needs of an expanded Navy."

The board will meet for the first time early in November. In addition to Admiral Blandy, it is made up of Charles Francis Adams, jr., president of Raytheon Manufacturing Company, Vice Chairman; Rear Admiral Irving McQuiston, USNR, military executive of the Department of Defense Reserve Forces Policy Board; and Rear Admiral James M. Ross, USNR, of Cities Service Oil Company. Lt. Comdr. Robert A. Rowe, USN, will serve as recorder.

RAdm. Mason Heads MSTSA

Rear Adm. Redfield Mason, USN, has assumed command of the Military Sea Transportation Service, Atlantic Area. The former Commander MSTSA, Rear Adm. John M. Will, USN, will now head Amphibious Group Three, Pacific. Admiral Will's flagship will be the USS Mount McKinley.

Admiral Mason was formerly on the staff of the Commander, Naval Forces, Far East.

Marine Corps Organizes First Inf. Training Reg.

Every raw recruit graduate of Parris Island assigned to a post or station or to sea duty, will receive individual infantry combat training at Camp Lejeune, N. C. starting early this winter.

The announcement came with a directive from the Commandant of the Marine Corps which provided for the formation of the 1st Infantry Training Regiment.

To head the new regiment, Headquarters has picked Col. T. A. Culhane, Second Marine Division G-3. The unit, due for activation 2 Nov. will be assigned space at Camp Geiger.

Slated to start training probably on 1 Dec. the regiment has a table of organization of 38 officers and 312 enlisted men, and will be able to train a capacity trainee body of 1,250.

All recruits being sent from Parris Island to a post or station or to sea duty, will stop over for a four-week session with the 1st Infantry Training Regiment. The course will include combat training in all phases, emphasizing field training in infantry-tank cooperation, rifle team and squad tactics, night operations, scouting and patrolling, individual and crew-served weapons, amphibious principles, judo and assault of a fortified position.

Col. J. H. N. Hudnall, Marine Corps Base G-3, said that four new training ranges are being built by the 8th Engineers near Camp Geiger to accommodate the new activity.

Subjects taught in "boot" camps will be coordinated with the subject matter of the four-week course, according to the Commandant's directive.

The unit is similar to the combat training program at Camp Pendleton, which handles the recruit graduates of the Marine Corps Recruit Depot at San Diego, Calif.

Submarine For Peru

The first Peruvian submarine launched at the Electric Boat Division of General Dynamics Corp. since 1928 slid down the ways this week.

The sub, the "Tiburon," commissioned for construction by the government of Peru, was swathed in crimson, white and green, the national colors of the South American country.

USMC's 1st Amphib Recon. Bn. to Arrive in Hawaii

A new unit, the 1st Provisional Amphibious Reconnaissance Battalion of the Fleet Marine Force, will arrive soon for six months training at Marine Corps Air Station, Kaneohe Bay, T. H.

Lt. Gen. Franklin A. Hart, USMC, CG of Fleet Marine Force, Pacific, notified Col. Boeker C. Batterton, commander of the 1st Provisional Marine Air Ground Task Force, FMF, that the newly assigned troops will undergo six months of air-ground exercises and amphibious warfare maneuvers, as have ground units previously attached to the task force.

Making up the specialized reconnaissance unit will be a reconnaissance company, a 75-millimeter pack howitzer battery, an engineer platoon, an amphibious tractor platoon and a detachment from a signal operating company.

The arrival of the provisional battalion from Force Troops at Camp Pendleton, Calif., will mark the first new group of ground troops to start the training program at the Hawaiian air station since the Third Regimental Combat Team was ordered to Japan to rejoin the Third Marine Division in early August.

Marine Corps Will Select 121 Majors For Promotion

A selection board will convene at Headquarters Marine Corps on 22 Oct. to select 121 majors for temporary promotion to the rank of lieutenant colonel.

Senior member of the board will be Brig. Gen. Thomas G. McFarland. Other members will be Colonels Robert H. McDowell, Charles H. Cox, Wilber J. McNenny, John M. Bathum, Donald L. Dickson, Marion M. Magruder, Rivers J. Morrell, William F. Prickett, and Colonel Paul H. Ashley. Captain Lee R. Hendell will serve as recorder.

Selections will be made under the provisions of the Temporary Promotion Act of 1941. Under this act there is no zone of eligibility, and officers not selected will not be considered passed over officials at Marine Corps Headquarters said.

Guide words
for today—

"In the mighty and almost limitless potential of American industry—the brilliance and rugged determination of its leaders; the skill, energy and patriotism of its workers—there has been welded an almost impregnable defense against the evil designs of any who would threaten the security of the American continent. It is indeed the most forceful and convincing argument yet evolved to restrain the irresponsibility of those who would recklessly bring down upon the good and peace-loving peoples of all the nations of the earth the disaster of total war."

—DOUGLAS MacARTHUR

Tyrant nations are deterred from aggression not only by our armed forces . . . but by the tremendous "potential of American industry" of which General MacArthur speaks.
Until the world finds lasting peace, military preparedness is clearly necessary.
But our greatest need is to preserve the freedom of opportunity and enterprise which made possible our industrial power. Freedom is our strength . . . our greatest resource . . . our hope for the future.

U. S. AIR FORCE

Increase Flying Jobs For AF Senior Observers

The Air Force has taken action to increase the assignment opportunities for senior observers, those who hold lieutenant colonel or colonel rank.

The new policy is in keeping with other recent efforts to insure equitable assignment consideration for observers. Heretofore, a problem has developed at times because of the scarcity of flying status assignments to which senior observers could be assigned.

This is being alleviated by action which makes observers eligible to command additional units and which identifies new billets to which they may be assigned.

THE JOURNAL publishes herewith the pertinent sections of the implementing message:

Part 2. Paragraph 3 of Air Force Regulation 24-1 and paragraph 20 of Air Force regulation 35-54 are being modified as follows: a. Flying units shall in all cases be commanded by Air Force officers who hold currently effective aeronautical ratings as pilot, senior pilot, or command pilot. Flying units are defined as those T/O&E and T/D units whose primary mission is the combat employment or determination of operational suitability of the piloted Air Force weapons system. Examples are the flying units of ADC, SAC, TAC and MATS (including transport and Rescue units). Flying organizations concerned with the training of pilots are considered flying units. b. Those units wherein the employment of aircraft is a corollary or support function to the primary mission of the unit shall be commanded by Air Force officers selected in the following order of priority: 1. Officers holding currently effective aeronautical ratings; 2. Non-rated officers. Examples are: Air Force observer training units; air base groups; technical intelligence units; research and development units and units where the primary mission is not the exploitation of the piloted Air Weapons System. Organizations, through group level, having clearance authority for aircraft will in all cases be commanded by rated officers. Where officers other than pilots are placed in command of units employing aircraft, the operations officer will in all cases be a rated pilot. c. Other units of the Air Force may be commanded by any Air Force officer, except as provided in d, e, and f below.

Part 3. In order to justify the retention of senior grade (lieutenant colonel and colonel) aircraft observers on flying status, it is necessary that such personnel not in combat crews be placed, insofar as possible in positions which require current flight knowledge and experience. Such positions suitable for the assignment of senior grade aircraft observers are those in which it would be desirable to have a rated pilot but where a rated pilot is not mandatorily required. They include the command of units as indicated in Part 2, par b, as well as many staff assignment in flying and other units such as in the fields of procurement, intelligence, etc. Emphasis must be placed upon getting these senior grade personnel into positions where there is a justifiable requirement for them to be on flight status, because otherwise the justification for their continuing to draw flying pay is questionable. The above is not to be interpreted to prohibit senior grade observers from attending schools, serving temporarily in other assignments for career broadening purposes, or the like, without loss of flight status.

Part 4. Non-rated officers currently in command of units referred to in Part 2, par b, need not be replaced until completion of their current assignment.

COMPARISON

Last Saturday, 17 Oct., Assistant Air Force Secretary Roger Lewis spoke at the dedication of Anchorage International Airport in Alaska. He noted that the next day would mark celebration of the 86th anniversary of the purchase of Alaska.

Mr. Lewis said "the consideration involved was a paltry $7,200,000 which will just about buy us two Boeing B-52's when they get into mass production."

USAF's FIRST TACTICAL, UNMANNED WEAPON, the Martin B-61 Matador pilotless bomber, takes off from its roadable launcher in this newly-released photo of the production bomber being fired at the Air Force Missile Test Center, Cocoa, Fla. Assigned to the Tactical Air Command, the Matador is now being used for training this country's first pilotless bomber squadrons at Patrick AFB, Fla. The Matador takes off from a launcher which may be towed quickly from one spot to another. The rocket motor under the tail gives the Matador the thrust necessary to become airborne, after which the rocket is jettisoned and the B-61's Allison J-33 turbojet engine takes over.

AF Will Open Pilot Tng. to High School Grads

Air Force pilot training will be opened to civilian high school graduates beginning 1 Nov.

Formerly, at least two years of college were required for direct entrance into the program from civilian status.

Airmen high school graduates have been eligible for pilot training since November 1951. The Air Force said this change in requirement does not imply a lowering of selection standards as a high school applicant must pass the same qualifying tests as the applicant with two or more years of college education.

It was explained that by increasing the number of applicants, the Air Force will be afforded a greater field from which to select these trainees who demonstrate the greatest aptitude for flying.

In addition to having a high school education, pilot trainees must be single male citizens in good health, of good moral character, and be between the ages of 19 and 26½.

Aircraft Observer training, a part of the Aviation Cadet program, was opened to high school graduates on an experimental basis last August.

Civilian applicants who qualify will be authorized a four-month deferment from Selective Service pending selection and assignment to training.

Advertisers in the Army Navy Air Force Journal support the Armed Forces and are familiar with their requirements.

Assign AF Lt. Col. To AEC

Assignment of Lt. Col. Harry B. Allen, USAF, to the Division of Military Application, U. S. Atomic Energy Commission in Washington, D. C., is announced at the AF Special Weapons Center, Kirtland AFB, N. M. He came to this installation in November 1949, and has held duties as Chief, Test Requirements and Projects Division.

Colonel Allen, 37, was graduated from the University of California at Los Angeles in 1939 with a Bachelor of Arts degree, and received his Master's there in 1942. He is presently completing studies for a PhD in geology from the California Institute of Technology.

In 1946, Colonel Allen participated in the "Crossroads" atomic tests in the Pacific. He was made a member of the Army-Navy Petroleum Board for the Joint Chiefs of Staff on geological and petroleum matters in 1947.

Leaves Libya For Texas

rates for those on active duty can be published by the Services until authority is granted from the White House.

Four Departments of Government have been forced consequently to put the cart before the horse.

Normally, responsibility is granted officially and then details are worked out. In this instance, details have been worked out; the official responsibility will come later.

The Secretaries of Defense, Treasury, Commerce, and Welfare have had to take steps to implement the Act in the absence of the pertinent Executive Order to safeguard the rights of retired military personnel and their families.

It is pointed out that each day there are a number of deaths on the retired lists. If these retired persons aren't given immediate opportunity to make their decision whether or not they want to be included in the plan—and if so, under which of four options—inevitable hardships will result.

The Departments have found it essential to devise tentative regulations and make preparations in the absence of required White House action.

At the Pentagon, the Services already have sent out scores of thousands of notices to all persons on the retired lists, Regular and Reserve, officer and enlisted, informing them of benefits available under the Act.

Many retired persons, particularly those under medical care, will act quickly to insure maximum protection for their families.

Military officials report that some problems already are being noted in the legislation.

Some experts say that the measure may be too rigid, that it does not take into adequate cognizance possible changes in human relations.

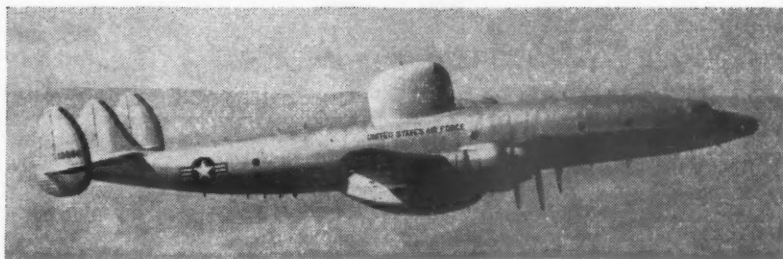

They explain that although changes and revocations in the options are possible, they must be in effect for at least five years.

Thus, for example, a major upon completion of 18 years service may express a desire to provide an annuity of 50 per cent for his wife. Then perhaps he changes his mind the next year and makes this only a 25 per cent annuity (or vice versa). The major then retires after 20 years service, but dies a year after his retirement. The original 50 per cent annuity would be in effect, since five years had not gone by.

Personnel experts say that this "five year lapse" between an annuity decision and its effective date is likely to lead to difficulties, when there are changes in domestic relations as a result of such factors as finances, deaths, divorce and separations.

Retired members can make no changes whatsoever in their options. Once made, this option is irrevocable.

You'll get special attention from Journal advertisers—they cater to Service personnel.

SEEING-EYE AIRPLANE. First flight photograph of the new Air Force RC-121C radar airplane shows the top "shark's fin" and lower "big bulge" radome installations of the Super Constellation-type airplane. Adapted for special defense missions, the long-range Lockheed transport carries search radar to high altitudes for line-of-sight surveillance. The flying radar stations can locate sneak raiders and can stay airborne for extended periods. Similar radar planes are in production at Lockheed for the Navy, which plans to use them to protect against surprise attack by sea or air and to help guide fighter planes to any approaching target.

Air Force's Orientation Group Shows Citizenry Where Tax Dollar Goes

The USAF Orientation Group was established seven years ago to keep the American public abreast of the rapid developments of the revolutionary post-war air age.

The theory was that since the public couldn't come to the Air Force, the Air Force would come to the public.

The idea has paid off. In terms of popular reception, the success of the project has been immense. Some sixty million persons have seen aerial displays staged by the USAFOG... at a cost to the AF of only a half-cent per spectator.

People who might otherwise have but a vague notion of how their tax-dollars were used by the AF, today have at least a layman's conception of what the AF has accomplished and is trying to achieve.

Shortly after WW II, Wright AFB, O., put on an exhibition of thousands of pieces of American and captured-enemy equipment. The display was an immediate hit, and before the Air Fair had closed, over a million persons had witnessed the show.

Air Force leaders were impressed and a traveling exhibit was planned and put into effect almost immediately. Later, a permanent organization was formed to carry the display to every part of the country.

The Group has now expanded to where it has over 70 composite exhibits comprising nearly 200 items, and is the parent group of a detachment which covers 11 western states.

Until recently, the Group was under the command of Col. Edwin H. Garrison, who is now attending the Armed Forces Staff College in Norfolk, Va. During an interim period, the Group is being commanded by Maj. Glen E. Buchanan, PIO, who will be succeeded this month by a permanent commander, Col. Robert A. Gould, Jr.

How does the Group function? After a request is made by an organization, such as a state fair, for AF participation, the request is forwarded to the Operations Section of the Group. Status boards are consulted as to the availability of the various exhibitions which the Group controls.

Let's assume the famed round-the-world B-50 bomber, the Lucky Lady II, and an animated theme exhibit, the Air Defense Command, are chosen. Operations immediately fills out advance notification forms alerting the various sections which will be involved in the display. These forms are directed to the Air-Age Education Office, Engineering Section, Production Control, Transportation, Art and Design and to the Manufacture and Repair Branch.

The education office gathers all releasable material on the items which are committed. Photos, news items, radio spots and television announcements are forwarded to publicity contacts.

Engineering and Manufacture and Repair check the items to determine if they are in working condition. Men are assigned to accompany the items to their destination and to remain with them while they are on exhibition.

Production Control figures the cost and the man hours which will be needed to complete the job, and Transportation maps out travel routes, the mileage, traveling time and trucks that will be necessary to transport the exhibit. Art and Design is alerted should any of the items need renovating or new placards for display purposes called for.

Nearly two hundred exhibits are on tour each year. Some last for several days, others for only one-day stands. Some displays feature a single item, others utilize dozens. For example, the recent National Aircraft Show in Dayton required 11 flat beds to transport the dozen items included in the Air Force portion of the show.

The Group maintains over a dozen aircraft, approximately the same number of theme exhibits, lifeboats, guided missiles, models, early flying equipment, engines and a pair of robot remote "Jetsters" designed to demonstrate the workings of robot control in the air, without ever actually leaving the ground.

In short, the Orientation Group is a miniature AF, especially designed to give the taxpayers a glimpse of what the dollar will buy in terms of air power today.

Soldier's Medal For Airman

An NEAC airman has been awarded the Soldier's Medal for heroism displayed during a rescue operation near Goose Bay, Labrador, on 22 Feb., 1953.

A/IC Thomas O. Millett served as crew chief of a rescue helicopter that located three fliers who had crashed four miles from the air base. Loading one of the injured airmen aboard the helicopter, Airman Millett volunteered to remain behind to look for the other missing members of the plane's crew.

Clothed only in fatigues with a flying jacket and boots, Airman Millett searched through the sub-Arctic wilderness and located another injured pilot in the deep snow. He administered first aid and insured that the pilot's circulation was maintained throughout the night at extreme discomfort to himself. Both men were rescued by helicopter the next morning.

Transportation Dependents

In decision B-116704, the Comptroller General submits the following interpretation of the Career Compensation Act of 1949 and Joint Travel Regulations:

"Under Section 303(c) of the Career Compensation Act of 1949 and paragraph 3003-1a, Joint Travel Regulations, issued pursuant thereto, an enlistee in the Regular Army is entitled to transportation of his dependents from his home to his first permanent station at Government expense even though he received an allowance for travel of his dependents to his home incident to termination of a prior enlistment."

CURTISS-WRIGHT

CORPORATION • WOOD-RIDGE, N. J.

Pay. Without the endorsement and active support of the Administration, there is virtually no chance of persuading an economy-minded Congress to grant a cost-of-living pay adjustment to the Armed Services.

Secretary Wilson, Assistant Secretary Hannah and others in the top Defense Department echelon seem to have been convinced by the facts that a pay increase is needed. Apparently, they favor the plan of Representative Van Zandt to tie pay to the cost-of-living rather than the recommendation made to Congress by President Truman and his Defense Secretary, Mr. Lovett, for a flat 8 per cent increase. But the Bureau of the Budget has declined to give official guidance, thus leaving Mr. Wilson and his associates in the position where they cannot actively support the measure.

The Van Zandt bill and the Truman recommendation are the only Service pay proposals officially before the Congress. Compare this lack of interest with the eager support given by Congressmen to the pay and welfare of the civilian employees of the Government most of whom are their active constituents and have families in their districts. Mr. John Cramer, who writes the Government employees' column "9 to 4:30" in the Washington Daily News, made a compilation this week of the great number of bills already before the committees of Congress for the benefit of the civilian employees. He showed that there are some 17 bills to increase their pay, six to improve their leave privileges, more than 50 to give better retirement rights, and many others covering such benefits as severance pay, merit promotions, etc. There will certainly be action on some of these bills.

For themselves, the members of Congress already have passed a measure setting up a Commission to study their own pay rates and those of Federal Judges. The measure is so rigged that when the Commission recommends an increase—as it surely will—Congress is required to act on it within 60 days. Then the required amount will quietly be placed in the Appropriations Bill and the higher rates will go into effect.

But pay readjustment for the Armed Services is out.

To counter this loss, the Department of Defense and the responsible committees of Congress must redouble their efforts to retrieve some of the lost attractiveness of Armed Services' careers. Without the prospect of pay readjustment, this must mean increased emphasis on regaining some of the lost "fringe benefits" and saving those now being threatened. Involved are housing, Commissary privileges, family care, retirement rights, travel pay, transportation of household goods and the many other factors that help to off-set the disagreeable facets of Service life. Only by vigorous action along these lines can the country hope to build and preserve the high-type of Defense this nation must have in these perilous times.

Home Loans. The Defense Department is fighting a good battle to win for officers and enlisted persons on active duty the same rights to GI home loans as are given to those who have left the Service.

Like so many similar problems, the home loan one has two edges. In the first place it is manifestly unfair to grant a privilege to a man who has formerly served his country and to deny the same privilege to one who has elected to continue to serve his country. In the second place, there is a terrific housing shortage in the Armed Forces (estimated at 470,000 units) which would be lessened every time a Service man decides he can buy a house near his duty station. To help him buy such a house—that is to grant him the same loans that are given to the local resident veterans —also helps the government toward the solution of its housing problem.

The Department of Defense has proposed legislation to bring active duty personnel under this provision of the GI Bill of Rights, but the Budget Bureau objects. The Defense Department—more power to it—has not dropped the idea, but is continuing to press for favorable action.

New Air Era. The delivery this week of the first production model of the supersonic F-100 Super Sabre marks the opening of a new phase in operational fighting aircraft. Although performance characteristics of the F-100 are restricted, the Nation has been assured that it already has flown faster than sound in level flight at high altitudes, thus becoming the first production plane to do so.

Following close on the heels of North America's F-100 will come McDonnell's F-101 "Voodoo" fighter, a twin turbo jet; Consolidated's F-102 supersonic interceptor designed for very high speeds in the stratosphere; and Republic's F-105.

The Navy, whose Douglas F4D Skyray now holds the world's speed record, has other forward looking developments.

The hope is that those who hold the purse strings will permit the promised accelerated production of these powerful new weapons for the defense of the Nation. Equally important is that the intensive research and development program which brought about these new productions be permitted to continue at a high level of activity.

Separate MSTs Promotions

Editor, THE JOURNAL:

I am one of a number of 1105 designator LTJG's on active duty attached to the Military Sea Transportation Service (MSTS) who were considered and passed over for promotion to senior grade lieutenant by the selection board which convened last May. The reason for our failure of selection was the fact that we are not qualified watch standers.

That reason is in itself understandable and justified. I will be the first to agree that line officers should be able to stand deck watches. What is not reasonable is the apparent lack of foresight shown in not assigning MSTs personnel to a separate category when the organizational structure of MSTs was set up. None of us requested duty in MSTs. That was our assignment. Why, therefore, should we sacrifice promotional benefits for these two years while our counterparts on Fleet ships are now wearing two full stripes.

In all fairness, MSTs line officers should be assigned to and considered by a separate designator. When we must smile like good fellows and congratulate on their promotions not only Fleet Officers but our own shipmates in the Medical Corps, our morale does not soar to very great heights—nor does our tolerance of the Navy increase.

Can't something be done about this unjust penalty?

LTJG, USNR-R

Calls on Wives to Help Save Commissary Privilege

Editor, THE JOURNAL:

As National Service Officer for the Gold Star Wives of America, I feel impelled to speak for a group with whom I work and whose interests are of greatest importance to me—the dependents of deceased servicemen. The letters that come into my office daily from these widows deal almost without exception with financial problems. How understandable this is! $75 a month or less for the widow—$121 for the widow with one child, etc. How do they manage?

First of all, every cent is important. Every benefit given by the Government—promised by the Government to that husband, now forever gone—means so many cents and dollars to that widow, now trying to rear the children of that dead soldier. Is it any wonder that the thought of the loss of commissary privileges and other benefits is very real and terrifying?

I know of young widows left with as many as four, five and six dependent children. To them, the saving of commissary shopping is very, very important. The widows and active servicemen with large families are the groups that will suffer most through the loss of commissary privileges and other fringe benefits. It is doubtful that the serviceman will get a pay raise to compensate for this loss—but it is even more doubtful that widows' compensation or pensions will ever be raised.

A young officer and his wife (she is the daughter of an old friend of mine) are seriously discussing his leaving the service for they feel they cannot afford to live in it any more. Having commissaries taken away is the "last straw"—and just the beginning of the loss of all benefits. They feel that these benefits had been promised to them as inducements which would make it possible for them to balance their budgets. This Lieutenant would like to make the Army his career as his father did. He cannot count on the benefits which would help stretch his pay to take care of all his obligations.

And what of the widow and children of the man who has devoted his life to a service career? What serviceman can bear to think of the plight of his family in case of his death?

We must stand together in a strong protest against the threat to our commissary privileges and other so-called "fringe benefits"—for the sake of the security and morale of our men in the Armed Services and for the aid of the families of deceased service personnel.

I know how worried the widows are about the present situation, since, in the course of my duties I hear from so many of them in this connection. We would like the wives of active service personnel to respond and do what they can to call attention to this threat to their security.

We invite interested wives to write to the Service Wives Coordinating Committee, who are working with us on this all important project. Address letters to the Service Wives Coordinating Committee, 1906 K Street, NW, Washington, D. C., and they will keep you informed of recent developments and how you can help.

NEW MODEL NATO STUDIED

A Speech, Press Conference and Trip, Are Related To One-Line Budget Prospect And There is Strong Speculation Defense Dept. Economy Will Stress Possible Overseas Cuts

A NEW model fiscal '55 NATO, which could be operated with fewer U. S. dollars and men, but which its engineers maintain could deliver more firepower is on the Pentagon designing board.

It may be rejected, possibly for another year. There are certain to be professional military men who will warn that tinkering with NATO forces could be dangerous. But right now, the "souped-up" model is receiving careful, albeit strictly tentative, study.

With all the obvious delicate international implications involved, the fact is obvious that no official wants to talk about a possible new NATO defense machine in direct terms, but there are plenty of indirect indications of what is in the books.

A basic problem is this: The Defense Department is striving desperately to cut military costs if such action can be taken without jeopardizing the security of the free world. To cut costs, manpower must be reduced, and manpower cannot be reduced unless the size of forces overseas is modified downward.

Any strength reduction in the Far East is out of the question until the political discussions progress much further than has been the case during recent weeks.

NATO Sole Possibility

Thus, with an Army which has 13 of its 20 combatant divisions overseas, the only possibility for a significant manpower reduction is to cut the size of our NATO force. If that is done, ZI support strength also could be reduced.

That this possibility is receiving energetic, although guarded, attention is apparent in an analysis of developments during the past week.

First, there was the address delivered in Washington last Friday by Deputy Defense Secretary Roger M. Kyes, his first formal public statement since returning from a month-long inspection across the Atlantic, mostly in Europe.

Second, was the surprise announcement the same day that Admiral Arthur W. Radford, JCS Chairman, would leave Sunday, 25 Oct., for a three to four weeks trip over much of the same territory covered by Mr. Kyes.

Third, was Defense Secretary Charles E. Wilson's press conference on Monday in which he said, in response to inquiries, that it may be possible "in the long run" to reduce the number of U. S. troops in Europe.

Await Adm. Radford's Return

Mr. Wilson said also that the fiscal '55 budget, which will determine the size and disposition of the Armed Forces through 30 June 1955, would not be firm until after Admiral Radford returns. The Defense Secretary has said he hopes to send only a one-line budget figure to Capitol Hill next January.

In the course of his session with reporters, Secretary Wilson made a significant observation in answer to a question as to whether the entire NATO system was being reviewed in order to make permanent decisions.

"Not to make permanent decisions," replied Mr. Wilson, "but in order to improve the program. I can't get away from my past experience. To bring out a new model every year in the automobile business we didn't say that we made a great mistake last year or five years ago, because we can improve it this year or it was different."

Mr. Wilson emphasized thus, that he intended no criticism against past NATO decisions and actions, but he feels there is room for improvement, just as with development of new automobile models.

Air-Firepower For Manpower

Pentagon observers, recalling Deputy Secretary Kyes' speech, are speculating that the new NATO will place greater relative reliance on airpower and heavier firepower, such as the 280mm. gun battalions which were cited by Mr. Wilson in the course of his press conference, than on numbers of manpower.

The Defense Secretary had stated previously that he thinks there are too many U. S. Servicemen and their families overseas and he wants to see what he can do about bringing some of them home.

A revised NATO, with fewer ground troops but, in his estimation, with greater firepower, is one logical answer to the budget dilemma confronting Secretary Wilson.

Asked for comment on Mr. Kyes' contention that a reappraisal of NATO requirements is in order, Mr. Wilson said the Deputy Defense Secretary had made "a very good statement." Then, Mr. Wilson went on to say:

"Bet On Safe Side"

"The military people always want to bet on the safe side by having the requirements from their point of view plenty high, and the civilians always have to take a look at how they balance out the possible danger and the assumed requirements of the military and what the people as a whole think they would like to contribute to the military strength of the nation."

Next, Mr. Wilson was asked this question:

"Mr. Kyes . . . referred to the importance of new weapons in relation to defense planning overseas. Do you anticipate that the development of new weapons will make any substantial reduction in troops overseas possible?"

He answered: "I would think it would in the long run."

"Do you have any specific plans for such a reduction?" he was asked.

"Nothing that I can talk about here today," the Secretary replied.

Similarly, Deputy Secretary Kyes gave no specific details in his speech last Friday. He warned, however, that "we can no longer prepare for every conceivable kind of war," and said "such an approach will require many courageous decisions." Mr. Kyes said the first phase of the NATO buildup is over. He said the second phase must "organize and prepare forces of the free nations so that they can be sustained sufficiently through a prolonged period and will be able to take the strain of wartime tasks in the event hostilities are forced upon us."

Mr. Kyes said pointedly, in speaking of NATO problems, that "we are entering a period during which the employment of new weapons will influence our strategy and organization."

It is likely that Admiral Radford's trip to Europe will have as a prime point of reference the relationship of the new weapons to the size and cost of the U. S. force required in Europe.

Trip a Surprise

His trip at this time is somewhat surprising, since it was presumed the Admiral would be busy with budget matters and the so-called JCS "new look." Apparently, Secretary Wilson and Admiral Radford feel that the budget cannot be determined and the "new look" completed until the JCS Chairman has been able to study the NATO defense situation on the spot.

It remains to be seen whether Admiral Radford and the other Chiefs, notably General Matthew B. Ridgway, formerly SACEUR, can go along with ease of mind in any plan to put into production at this time a NATO model with a "substantial" reduction in manpower. There are many among the outstanding professional military personnel of the nation who do not yet buy without reservation the contention of some civilian officials that atomic firepower, such as the 280mm. guns, can permit stripped-down manpower.

At Panmunjom On Monday, and Thereafter

COMMENT ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

THE COMING WEEK'S meeting at Panmunjom, suddenly assented to by the Red delegates, will deal with matters already unilaterally decided but not yet announced. Nominally the conference with the Chinese and North Korean representatives (at which Arthur H. Dean, Secretary Dulles' special deputy on these negotiations, will represent the 16 United Nations which have fought on the peninsula) will determine the time and place for a later, long-awaited peace conference. Actually the Red delegates next Monday will move or not move in whatever manner has already been dictated at Peiping and Moscow, with unhappy Pyongyang obeying blindly. The Reds have already said that they "reserve the right" next week to discuss the presence of neutral nations at the later conference; the United Nations thus far have accepted the United States' view that no neutrals are required (primarily because the Republic of Korea, principal victim of the Red aggression, has refused to sit at the table with India as a neutral).

Here, then, is a probable roadblock to progress, whose reality cannot be verified until Monday and whose durability cannot be confidently described even then. For the Red's standard procedure is to delay action by repetitious and abusive argument in the hope, too often fulfilled, that his opponent will quit in discouragement and yield on an issue of ultimate importance. If the coming week's Panmunjom agenda are quickly agreed upon and promptly considered, looking toward the more important deliberations to come, it will be because the Reds wish the peace negotiations to be expedited and for no other reason. And nothing in their recent behavior supports that hope. We would be well advised therefore to expect more delay and fruitless argument, designed to keep us widely deployed as at present, and exposed always to the possibility of new disagreements developing between us and the Roks and our other allies.

EVEN the prisoner exchange was halted for several days by the neutral commission's refusal (by 3-2 vote) to compel resisting Chinese and North Korean prisoners to listen to the "explanation" of the Red persuasion-teams. The minority vote (which would have required the Indian troops to use force to compel the anti-Communist prisoners to listen to Red whoops and screams), not surprisingly, came from the "neutrals" sent by Poland and Czechoslovakia. And not surprisingly, in view of Red behavior at the United Nations meetings and elsewhere, when these two found themselves outvoted they walked out of the meeting. This sort of stupidity is irritating, but in the long run is perhaps useful to our own purposes: its effect upon the three majority members of the commission, and particularly on India as a whole (which will profit by the observation) can hardly be to stimulate their admiration for Red techniques.

IN THE MIDDLE EAST and Mediterranean the new troubles have not visibly decreased. Israel's position in world respect has suffered appreciably from the incident at Kibya, where some two score Arab villagers, including women and children, were butchered in a sudden raid over the border from the Israeli side. Israel's explanations have not been accepted as satisfactory and, despite Israeli protests against certain of our promises, indication is that the State Department will withhold a very considerable amount of economic aid which was destined for Israel, until the troubles are reduced. This suggests that Israel's continued activity upon a critical dam-and-irrigation enterprise (in which Israel denies that Jordan's water-rights are truly endangered) would further intensify present poor relations not alone with Arab neighbors but with the United States. The disagreement with the Arabs is of long standing, and certainly there are two sides to that argument. But the outside world cannot permit the Arab-Israel hostilities to be fanned into an even hotter flame, by whose fault. Too much is at stake.

IN TRIESTE our situation has not improved, and the British-American decision of 8 October to withdraw occupation forces from Zone A, and turn full sovereignty over to Italy is not yet on the way to implementation. What may once have seemed a tolerable solution to the eight-year problem has proved to be something altogether different; and indeed even the assembling of a proposed five-nation conference (Britain, France, Italy, Yugoslavia, and the United States) cannot be undertaken until there is something approaching full agreement on the agenda. For both at home and in Washington, Yugoslavia has stated firmly that no conference will be acceptable if its announced purpose is simply to discuss implementing of a unilateral decision already arrived at without Yugoslavia's participation or knowledge.

The issues are not easily settled, for they are concerned with nationalisms which have been seething for many years, as well as with economics which are not visibly changing. For Trieste was built up by Austria before World War I and was then integrated with the interior country which now is largely Yugoslavia. The latter country points out that two of its own main railroads today are natural carriers to and from Trieste and no other port, and that Yugoslavia's present port (old Fiume) is inadequate even for the American-aid shipments. Yugoslavia also contends bitterly that the population of Trieste is dominantly Italian only because Italy after World War I evicted some 150,000 Slovenes, and that a "fair" plebiscite would be one taken after those exiles shall have been returned, an unlikely event. The hostilities of Italian and Yugoslav are historic and intense, and it is most questionable whether any temporary settlement satisfactory to one nation will be tolerable to the other.

MEANTIME the western nations have a very large concern over the dispute. For a glance at the map shows how narrow is the belt of land between Trieste's wharves and the Iron curtain to the northeast. A reading of history tells how often that gap has been used for invasion movements one way or the other. Now to have the NATO defenses to East and West exposed to such a peril as a continuing breach over Trieste is ample cause for anxiety; therein, rather than in the happiness of Italian or Yugoslav, one may confess, is the reason for our present determined effort to bring to the upper Adriatic some kind of settlement.

THE 305TH MEDIUM WING of B-47 jet bombers (about 45 planes, Col. Elliott Vandevanter, jr., commanding) which in September left MacDill Field for a 90-day training cycle in England, will deploy to North Africa early next month for several days. It will constitute the first mass appearance of the Air Force's new medium bomber in the new French Moroccan air fields of Nouasseur and Sidi Slimane. A squadron of the heavy B-36s, of the Seventh Bomb Wing at Carswell Air Force Base, flew to Nouasseur early in October for its part in SAC training for unit mobility.

PENTAGON OBSERVERS will watch closely to see how the Services play Deputy Defense Sec'y Keyes' contention that "our military forces must be planned outmoded" weapons and defense concepts must go. Many suspect that cuts in all the Services—except the Air Force—are in the offing, that his speech late last week was a tip-off.

ONLY A FEW HOURS AFTER Mr. Keyes spoke in Washington, AF Under Sec'y Douglas told a Chicago audience that "our military forces must be planned in the light of our growing capabilities in the field of nuclear weapons and with the expectation of their efficient employment." He noted "the Air Force is the one Service still engaged in a major program of expansion," reminded his audience that a "fine" Army and Navy are needed, but concluded by quoting a statement of Mr. Keyes' that "when I mention military strength . . . air is the keynote . . . make no mistake about that."

A DIFFERENT APPROACH was taken last month by Navy Sec'y Anderson. In a speech delivered at the Marine Corps Schools, Quantico, Va., he warned that super-weapons might cancel themselves out, said it was conceivable that as a result there may be greater reliance on "conventional" means of warfare.

THERE'S LITTLE DOUBT the Air Force will take a cue from Mr. Keyes and hit hard for budget action giving full recognition to the new weapons. The Army is likely to counsel caution; will warn against placing too much stress on atomic warfare, undoubtedly will cite Korea as an example. The Navy and Marine Corps will reiterate Sec'y Anderson's Quantico position. The varying viewpoints will be kept in check, if possible, but Congress will have probing questions next year during work on the defense budget and these questions will have to be answered by the Pentagon civilian and military chiefs.

THREE MARINE GENERALS will be on duty simultaneously at Camp Pendleton, Calif. Maj. Gen. John T. Selden takes over 1 Nov. as CG; Brig. Gen. William J. Scheyer remains as asst. base commander and Maj. Gen. James P. Riseley will become deputy commander next month.

BUREAU BUDGET officials apparently are up to former antics of hitting at the Services, for it is now revealed the BOB is dubious about continuation of Soldier Deposits and is opposed to GI Home Loan benefits for Servicemen. The BOB recently forced action raising rentals for many in uniform occupying Government quarters. It will be interesting to see what the BOB says about the upcoming proposal to implement the Moulton Commission recommendations on dependent care at a cost of $30 to $40 million annually. In years past, the BOB has attempted to curtail dependent care—not expand it as the civilian commission recommended.

MATERIEL RECLAMATION has commanded widespread attention in the Armed Services during recent months, but sometimes has led to 'cost unconsciousness.' The Air Force recently discovered an instance where certain property was restored to serviceable use at a labor expense $17,365 greater than the items cost new.

A HOWL COULD DEVELOP LATER, but up to now there has been surprisingly little adverse reaction from air enthusiasts to unofficial disclosure that the 143 wing goal has again been deferred. The new "interim" goal of the JCS reportedly is 127 wings. A good guess is that Gen. Twining, AF CofS, has passed the word that the AF is doing relatively all right in the new budget talks and that AF officers are not to become involved in a duplication of protests heard last year. It's learned that the "harmony" theme was stressed at a recent session of the Air Staff.

BUSIEST MAN AT THE PENTAGON designation could well go to Army Lt. Gen. Lyman L. Lemnitzer, Deputy Chief of Staff, Plans and Research. He's largely responsible for detailed Army work in connection with JCS studies—a full-time job in itself. And in addition to the other duties of his office, he is the sole Army member of the Advisory Committee on Army Organization.

NAVY'S NEW ORGANIZATION COMMITTEE, similar to the Army's, has been asked by Sec'y. Anderson to look into the relationship of BuPers to the Office SecNav. In the Army and Air Force, there are assistant secretaries for personnel, but not in the Navy. Mr. Anderson reportedly wants to find out if a plan for more direct civilian control should be devised for the Navy.

UNIVAC, the fabulous "mechanical mind" which experienced some difficulties during civilian service in last year's election tabulations, has joined the Armed Forces. The device was mustered into service to compute actuarial tables for the new Survivor Benefits legislation which goes into effect on 1 Nov. Some Pentagon officials feel that Univac deserves a decoration for "outstanding performance of duty."

ADDITIONAL FORCE-OUTS for non-Regular Army officers will be announced shortly, following dispatch of some 2200 notices this month. It's a good bet the second increment will be considerably less and there's a strong possibility it will mark the end of involuntary Army releases. Applications for voluntary accelerated release from active duty have been heavier than expected. Only hitch would be if the Army is reduced in strength next year.

ASST. SECDEF HANNAH who agreed last Feb. to serve a year and who has continued meantime in dual status as president of Michigan State College has been asked by SecDef Wilson to remain on the job an additional six months—until next August. The college trustees are expected to go along in view of the Administration request. Dr. Hannah's departure from the Pentagon before next year's legislative program is acted on would be harmful to the Services. Not the least area in which he has become an influential expert is that of Service Attractiveness.

SHORT HUNDREDS OF NURSES, the Army will open a fourth practical nurse course for enlisted men and women at Brooke AMC, Ft. Sam Houston, Tex., next Feb. The pilot course was conducted at Walter Reed AMC in the Capital. Meantime, the Defense Dept. is working on a plan which would subsidize the education of eligible young women in nursing schools, who would agree to serve four years on active duty. It is similar to the Holloway Plan for NROTC students.

Mrs. LeMay, Aided By Officer and NCO Wives, Launches SAC Family Welfare Study at USAF Bases

(The following report from Strategic Air Command headquarters is another example of how Service wives are playing a leading role in the current Defense Department effort to raise the attractiveness of a military career. Pentagon officials are unanimous in their agreement that family welfare is a key to the problem).

A volunteer committee of officer and non-commissioned officer wives will visit several Strategic Air Command bases to study family personal affairs problems arising from the rapid deployment of personnel to distant areas for periods of training. SAC headquarters at Offutt AFB, Neb., announced this week.

The committee, headed by Mrs. Curtis E. LeMay, wife of the SAC Commander, will visit Carswell AFB at Fort Worth, Tex., in the near future. Carswell was the first SAC base to augment small Personal Affairs staffs, established at Air Force bases to relieve hardships caused by dislocations and military movements with volunteer workers from members of the officer and NCO wives' clubs.

In addition to Mrs. LeMay, other committee members include Mrs. Herbert I. Shingler, jr., president, and Mrs. Reade F. Tilley, of the Offutt Officers Wives' Club; Mrs. Donald K. Storzbach, president, and Mrs. Raymond W. Morrison, of the Offutt Non-Commissioned Officers Wives' Club, and Major J. M. Boyer, Personal Affairs Branch Chief at SAC headquarters.

Assists Families

Mrs. LeMay has had a great deal of experience in volunteer work along the line of assisting families of officers and airmen while the Air Force man was overseas. She was chairman of the Lakeview, Ohio, Junior Red Cross from October 1942 until August of 1945, while General LeMay's bombers were battering Germany and Japan. Her work included lectures to war wounded, helping the wounded with their personal affairs and general rehabilitation.

Mrs. LeMay said the committee would survey all phases of the Carswell AFB volunteer personal affairs organization.

"We are interested in three major points about the Carswell volunteer assistance program," she said. "First, we want to get first-hand information as to how well the program is functioning. Secondly, we want to know how many committees and the number of volunteers will be needed for a good program at all SAC bases, and finally, we want to know what type of training is needed for our prospective volunteers."

A SAC spokesman said volunteer personnel from the officer and NCO Wives' Clubs are needed at all bases to operate the projected personal affairs program. The committee will visit several other bases of the command within the next few months.

Provide Welfare Services

The Air Force Personal Affairs Program is designed to provide adequate welfare services for its military personnel and their dependents as expeditiously as possible.

An example of the SAC Personal Affairs Program was typified in a recent bomber wing deployment to an overseas base.

During the 90-day overseas training tour, an airman's wife expected birth of a child. The couple had only recently moved to the city. In the absence of her husband, she was able to call on the base personal affairs officer who arranged for medical care, arranged a loan from Air Force Aid Society so that her mother could be with her, and arranged for the chaplain to make regular visits to the hospital and house. Letters from the chaplain to the airman, in addition to regular letters from the wife, eased the airman's mind when he was many thousands of miles away and enabled him to do his job with usual efficiency.

Volunteers from SAC Officer and NCO Wives' Clubs are needed in the Personal Affairs Program because there aren't enough military personnel available to operate the highly important program at desired efficiency.

Both clubs are well organized and the ladies have expressed much interest in furthering aid to SAC people.

sponsored by the wives of the officers on the Dental Service and attended by 65 members. Included Lt. Col. Sylvia M. Evans, Chief Nurse, First Vice President; Mrs. Albert E. Montgomery, wife of the Assistant Chief of the Medical Service, Second Vice President; and Mrs. Ralph R. Chapman, wife of the Chief of the General Surgical Section, Corresponding Secretary.

Mrs. Kenneth A. Brewer, wife of the hospital Commanding Officer, was named honorary president as the group became formally organized.

INDUSTRY * FINANCE

AOA Forms New Division To Help on Guided Missiles

The production of guided missiles for the Armed Forces of our country will be assisted by some of the best engineering talent of American industry, according to an announcement by Brig. Gen. Burton O. Lewis, Staff Consultant of the American Ordnance Association with headquarters in Washington, D. C.

The Association has formed a new Technical Division devoted to the production engineering of guided missiles and rockets. Represented on this Division will be many of the key executives and engineers of industrial companies and engineering laboratories of the United States. These men will serve in an advisory capacity on a voluntary basis without cost to the Government. Their recommendations are made to the Army, Navy and Air Force.

Chairman of this newly formed Guided Missile and Rocket Division is Mr. C. L. Eksergian, Staff Executive Engineer of The Budd Company of Philadelphia, Pa. Mr. Eksergian has been associated since 1923 with The Budd Company, one of the largest ammunition producers of the United States—having made during World War II more than 70 million shells ranging in caliber from the 60 mm to the 155 mm. The normal peacetime products of this company include automobile bodies, wheels and railroad cars, but in addition The Budd Company has performed a large amount of development work for the Army, Navy and the National Defense Research Council.

The American Ordnance Association was formed 35 years ago and comprises nearly 34,000 executives and engineers of American Science and Industry who cooperate with the Armed Forces in the design and production of superior weapons for United States defenses.

Navy Using Automatic Recorder For Air-Talk

More than 500 24-hour automatic sound recorders have been in use during the past year at Naval air stations throughout the world to make transcriptions of ground-to-air and air-to-ground communications.

The magnetic tape recorder-reproducer was perfected after several years of research by the U. S. Navy Bureau of Ships and engineers of SoundScriber Corporation who manufacture the device.

The SoundScriber is capable of delivering 24 and 48 hours of continuous unattended high-quality magnetic recording on either one or two channels of communications simultaneously, on one roll of tape. It also records the time the messages are received and measures elapsed time between recordings. The instrument plays back recordings instantly, when a playback switch is thrown.

The magnetic tape recorder-reproducer is also being used by Aeronautical Radio, Inc., to record communications to and from aircraft in flight, transmission and reception of airways instructions, weather reports and forecasts, aircraft positional reports, and all types of in-flight instructions required by airlines dispatch offices of pilots.

Three of the machines are in round-the-clock service at Aeronautical Radio's Valley Stream, N. Y., control point.

Aeronautical Radio is a non-profit organization, furnishing air-ground and point-to-point communications for the airlines industry. The company serves all airlines and other aircraft operators desiring service.

Former Army Transport Chief Tells Problems Of Future Defense, Urges That Planning Begin Now

"Transportation is the key stone of the whole logistical defense structure of our defense and is the fulcrum without which the level of our armed strength cannot operate," Maj. Gen. Edmond H. Leavey, USA-Ret., former Chief of Army Transportation, told the National Defense Transportation Association meeting last week at Louisville, Ky.

He said the transportation industry must start planning now and implementing these plans if the U. S. is "to weather the next storm."

Problems the transportation industry must meet as outlined by General Leavey included:

The establishment of arterial, restricted-use truck-roads between airfields and terminals of other types of transport.

A sufficient number of river crossings over such streams as the Potomac, the Mississippi, the Ohio, and the Missouri to permit free flow of rail and water traffic north and south and east and west.

Expansion of the highway system to support both military and civil defense and to carry military and civil traffic in the event some motor, rail or air facilities are destroyed.

A system of faster interchange and transfer of cargo between the various forms of transportation, and of quick re-routing of all forms of traffic if normal routes are blocked out, must be developed.

The working out of plans for fuel supply and for maintenance and repair of equipment and the development of more and better mechanical handling devices, and the development of plans for obtaining and training manpower to meet peak loads.

■ EGLIN AFB, FLA. A "Home State" luncheon was given 14 Oct. by the Officers' Wives Club, sponsored by the wives of the 3203rd Supply Group. Two hundred and seventy members filed into the gaily decorated "convention-hall" dining room.

High-flying red balloons designated the states in the map-like arrangement of the tables—many large states having individual tables and other smaller ones being sectionally grouped. By counting the delegates from the two largest tables, Virginia and Texas, it was soon apparent that Texas had the largest (23) individual state delegation.

A skit enacted by six club members, Mesdames C. H. Diehl, Jr., A. C. Ellason, C. G. Mullins, Jr., J. K. Justice, R. N. Jukes, and H. C. France, portrayed the pitfalls of telephone gossip among Service wives.

A business meeting conducted by Mrs. Walter B. Putnam, president, consisted of announcements and a discussion of plans for the Officers' Wives Club Christmas party. A short period of enthusiastic singing of state songs preceded the distribution of door prizes. One member of each table received a prize, the lucky one having chosen the "prize" chair. Mrs. C. R. Hoffman received the special door prize given to the largest table, Texas. Mrs. George Wischman, from the Georgia delegation was the happy recipient of the other door prize.

Mrs. Conrad H. Diehl, Jr., coordinator of the luncheon committee, and Mrs. E. J. W. McKinney, chairman of the decorating committee, were congratulated on the success of the program and the decorations.

Smythe, wife of the newly appointed Deputy Commanding General attended the luncheon and personally greeted the ladies at an Afternoon Tea, which followed the business meeting. Receiving with Mrs. Parks and Mrs. Smythe were: Mesdames Leslie D. Carter, wife of the past Commander of Second Army, T. V. Stayton, J. R. Sharp, Henry Luongo, B. M. Bonham and A. Cararie.

Following the introduction of new club officers and committee heads, Col. M. J. Geraghty, Post Commander, spoke on the Post Activities functioning at Ft. Meade.

Retired Officers' Wives' Club Busy at Clearwater

■ CLEARWATER, FLA. The Retired Officers' Wives' Club held its first luncheon meeting of the winter season 15 Oct. with Mrs. Marion Maddox, president, and Mrs. Paul Freeman, treasurer, as hostesses.

Mrs. Maddox greeted the guests and announced that the meeting marked the beginning of the Club's sixth season. Membership has grown from twenty in 1948 to 90 active members at the present time.

Mrs. Kelsie Reaves, wife of Colonel Reaves who is the commanding officer of Unit Training Center Number One on the East Coast of Korea, read a letter from her husband which appealed for clothing to be sent to his area for the 13,000 Korean school children. It stressed the fact that the Koreans had only one set of clothing. A reminder was made that a Korean of 18 was usually the same size as an American child of twelve. The group voted unanimously to contribute clothing of all kinds which will be packed and sent to Colonel Reaves for distribution at Christmas time. Toys will also be included. Members may bring the articles to Mrs. Reaves' home at 30 West Turner Street or to the next meeting of the club.

Mrs. Maddox introduced 11 new members: Mesdames John Weller, Paul Koonce, R. J. Mermord, J. B. Heles, Bradford Kunz, R. H. Kiebach, Virginia Clark, G. C. Davis, Everett Nolen, J. L. Gibney and Everett Rea.

The next regular meeting will be held 19 Nov. with Mrs. Ralph Kiely and Mrs. Russell Cook as hostesses.

Rep. Cole Attacks New Liquor Rules

was not his intention "to repeal existing laws on the subject nor to provide authority for the action which has recently taken place regarding bottled liquor."

His letter is certain to strengthen the hand of those groups which are attacking the policy announced at the Pentagon. Among the critics of the Pentagon action are such organizations as the Women's Christian Temperance Union and the Retail Liquor Dealers Association.

The chairmen of the Senate and House Armed Services Committees, Senator Saltonstall (R-Mass.), and Representative Short (R-Mo.), were briefed on the Pentagon's plans prior to announcement of the policy change.

Both chairmen concurred with Dr.

Hannah that it would be in the best interests of the Defense Department to have liquor available under conditions where military officials could keep strict control on its use.

Detailed rules were worked out to prevent any abuse of the new privilege.

Dr. Hannah is convinced that members of Congress will endorse the Pentagon action when they are aware of the facts. Representative Cole, on the other hand, feels strongly that the Defense Department should reverse its decision.

A compromise does not seem out of the question. Some are speculating that the Defense Department and its critics on this action may be able to get together on a policy which would permit sale of liquor by the individual drink at clubs and Service lounges on military installations, but which would curtail or restrict the new rules authorizing sale of alcoholic beverages by the bottle.

Text of Letter

Here is the text of Representative Cole's letter:

"Thank you for your letter concerning the recent action by the Department of Defense to allow bottled liquor to be sold at officers' and non-commissioned officers' messes of the Army and Air Force.

"When the UMT legislation was adopted in 1951 I was successful in having an amendment adopted which gave the Secretary of Defense the authority to make uniform regulations regarding alcoholic beverages for all three branches of the Armed Services. It was not my intention to repeal existing law on the subject nor to provide authority for the action which has recently taken place regarding bottled liquor.

"Therefore, I have strongly protested this action to the Department of Defense and I have received assurance that my views will be given consideration. It is my hope that the situation will eventually be adjusted in such fashion that among all our Service personnel—officer and enlisted, regular and reserve, Army, Navy, and Air, young and old—abstinence will be encouraged; sobriety will be required; and intemperance will be prohibited.

"In any event, it is my firm belief that it is both wrong and unnecessary for the Federal Government to be in the business of trafficking in bottled liquor and unless discontinued by order of the Secretary of Defense, I shall urge Congress to legislate against such practice."

Brig. Gen. Hayden Reports On Eastern AAA Defense

sible degree of operational readiness. This means that, with minimum warning, the fire units must be able to deliver maximum effective fire upon any hostile aircraft that comes within range. In order to maintain this effectiveness, an unusual degree of aggressive leadership is required of all unit commanders. Daily reports designating the exact status of each defense are received from all units of the command. Field maintenance support rendered by the Continental Armies and persistent attention to first echelon maintenance by unit commanders have resulted in an amazingly small percentage of non-operational units and deadlined equipment. Integrated Ordnance Fire Control teams supplemented with Department of the Army civilian technicians provide assistance as well as technical instruction in maintaining the ultra-modern equipment and weapons with which many of our units have been armed.

Training, an essential ingredient of readiness, has a high priority in the daily operations of the command. New arrivals are indoctrinated with the importance of the individual Army antiaircraftman's role. He is a key combat soldier in the front air defense line. First and foremost, he must become a qualified artilleryman. In order to save manpower and still provide necessary leaves and passes, normal overhead personnel such as cooks, mechanics, drivers, and clerks all "double" as gun crewmen or radar personnel. Training also continues for the older assignees to increase their overall proficiency and to prepare them for jobs of greater responsibility. While routine training is accomplished on-site, Army service schools are utilized to the maximum extent in the training of key specialists.

Range Firing

Within the scope of the annual training cycle, the most important phase is antiaircraft artillery range firing which provides a test for the equipment as well as the officer-enlisted team. Each firing battery is required each year to conduct several target practices in addition to completing at least one Army training test. In this connection, the procurement of suitable firing ranges has been a continuous problem which stems from the logical requirement that ranges must be close to the defended area to reduce travel time to a minimum.

The officers and enlisted men are required to live at or near the gun positions so that the fire units can be fully manned and ready for action immediately should necessity arise. A minimum manning level insuring full effective fire is maintained 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, and 365 days a year. This constant state of readiness requires a closely supervised pass program as well as recreational and educational activities for the benefit of those men who must remain on-site.

Living Conditions

The improvement of on-site living conditions has been a perpetual program. Tremendous changes have taken place since the first units were ordered to tactical positions and erected their tent cities. Squad tents and Jamesway huts have been replaced by prefabricated barracks, dayrooms, and administrative buildings, all erected by troop labor in the interest of economy. Mess halls and essential facilities plus roads and hardstands for guns and vehicles have been provided by contracts let by district engineers. The finishing touches, which include the erection of storage buildings, fences, sentry boxes, flag poles, and the grading and planting of shrubbery and grass, are now in the process of completion by the battery personnel at each site. When the present construction program has been completed, the typical antiaircraft site will resemble a diminutive Army post.

The assignment of antiaircraft units to static defense missions has resulted in a revision of tables of organization and equipment. These new T/O&E's delete all but the minimum essential men and equipment required for AA units to per-

U. S. COAST GUARD

Commandant—Vice Adm. Merlin O'Neill

THE U. S. Coast Guard Academy, New London, Conn., will be host Saturday, 31 Oct., to Secretary of the Treasury George M. Humphrey and Assistant Secretary H. Chapman Rose in observance of the Academy's annual Secretary's Day.

On arrival at the Academy, Secretary Humphrey will receive the military honors accorded a member of the cabinet, and will review the corps of cadets.

Other events include luncheon with the cadets, a football game between the Academy and Trinity College, and a formal cadet dance.

The two Treasury officials will be accompanied by Vice Adm. Merlin O'Neill, Commandant of the Coast Guard.

Reserve Publication

A monthly publication entitled "The Coast Guard Reservist" has been established with approval of the Bureau of the Budget to meet the requirements of the Armed Forces Reserve Act of 1952 concerning the dissemination of information to all members of reserve components.

This periodical will begin with a November 1953 issue. It will be distributed to reservists on active and inactive duty.

Copies will be mailed in bulk to each district reserve director who will, in turn, be responsible for distribution to enlisted and officer reservists on inactive duty in his district. Copies for every member of the 77 organized reserve training units will be mailed directly to these units from Headquarters. Copies will be mailed from Headquarters to regular Coast Guard units (ashore and afloat) for distribution to reservists currently on active duty.

form their on-site mission and have resulted in savings of millions of dollars to the American taxpayer and at the same time have lessened the maintenance load on each individual unit.

Planning for the employment of newer, more powerful antiaircraft weapons and the necessary steps to insure their most effective use is a continuous program. Among these new weapons in the antiaircraft arsenal are the 75-mm automatic cannon "Skysweeper" and the surface-to-air guided missiles. All firing batteries are now equipped with the new Antiaircraft Fire Control System M-33 which electronically detects and picks up targets at far greater ranges than previously employed fire control systems, instantaneously supplies the battery commander with the information he needs in regard to the selection of targets, and then automatically feeds the necessary data to control the aiming of the guns.

Adm. Rickover's New Job

Rear Adm. H. G. Rickover, USN, this week was given "immediate responsibility" for directing the building of a major atomic power plant.

This was announced in a Chicago speech by Atomic Energy Commissioner Thomas E. Murray.

Admiral Rickover has been concerned particularly during recent years with development of the Navy's first nuclear powered submarine, the USS Nautilus, which will be launched in January, and a sister-type ship, the USS Sea Wolf.

Admiral Rickover was given the new assignment, said Commissioner Murray because of his "unique experience and accomplishments in building propulsion power reactors."
